I Hate Im In Love

Because when I'm in love, I live for somebody that is not me, and that's not what love is about. Also (and this is the golden key to my broken love life), I hate how I consider myself unworthy of being loved. After all, why would you love someone like me, whispers the tiny voice in the corner of my conscience.

I hate that I can't outright say “I love kids” or be nice to the children around me without people assuming the worst of me. I hate that, as a man, I'm automatically suspected of being a predator. I love kids! I would love to have a full time career working with kids! But since I'm a man, I can't, and it sucks.

Let me start off by saying that I love Catullus. I love his poems, because even though they're 2000 years old, they still feel so real and true. It's about love, but mostly about how painful love can be. How it can twist into something incredibly ugly and make something ugly of yourself as well. The Latin poems would get a 5/5 stars for me.

I also wonder if our problems have anything to do with my sexuality, which if I'm being completely honest, I have been questioning.
